ANALYSIS/OPINION:

The new coronavirus is real.

The response to the coronavirus is hyped. And in time, this hype will be revealed as politically hoaxed.

In fact, COVID-19 will go down as one of the political world’s biggest, most shamefully overblown, overhyped, overly and irrationally inflated and outright deceptively flawed responses to a health matter in American history, one that was carried largely on the lips of medical professionals who have no business running a national economy or government.

Are members of the House essential workers? Maybe not.

The facts are this: COVID-19 is a real disease that sickens some, proves fatal to others, mostly the elderly — and does nothing to the vast majority.

That’s it.

That, in a nutshell, is it.

Or, in the words of Dan Erickson and Artin Massih, doctors and co-owners of Accelerated Urgent Care in Bakersfield, California: Let's get the country reopened — and now.

“Do we need to still shelter in place? Our answer is emphatically no. Do we need businesses to be shut down? Emphatically no. ... [T]he data is showing it's time to lift,” Erickson said, in a recent interview.

The data to keep America closed and Americans closed in simply doesn't exist.

If truth be told, it's questionable it ever did.

The scientists leading the coronavirus shutdown charge predicted in March that in America, between 100,000 and 250,000 would die. They based those estimates on computer modeling.

But at the same time they were basing those estimates on computer modeling, they were acknowledging that computer modeling is inaccurate and errs on the side of hype.

“I've never seen a model of the diseases I've dealt with where the worst-case actually came out,” said Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases and a member of President Donald Trump's White House coronavirus task force, during a CNN interview in March. “They always overshoot.”

Catch that? Fauci's message: Computer models are flawed and inaccurate and always overestimate the problem.

But from these faulty overinflated computer figures came all the constitutionally questionable actions by government anyway — from ordering businesses closed to quarantining-slash-house arresting American citizens to doing some quick and pitiful and economically painful income redistribution schemes via stimulus funds' legislation.

Since, about 56,000 have died in America due to coronavirus — or have they? Again, the facts are flimsy.

Government ordered hospitals weeks ago to stop performing elective surgeries to make way for the projected numbers of coronavirus patients. So they did. And in so doing, they cut off their revenue streams. So Congress passed legislation giving hospitals billions of dollars to treat coronavirus patients. Conflict of interest? Yikes. Yes.

The coronavirus counts, already flawed from computer modeling, were then given another flaw treatment.

"[Pennsylvania] removes more than 200 deaths from official coronavirus count as questions mount about reporting process, data accuracy," The Inquirer reported.

Add to that the ever-changing nature of a virus that spreads by air and contact, and honestly, suddenly, even expert Fauci's best guess is about as good as Joe Neighbor's best guess. So that leaves common sense, combined with knowledge of past viruses, to guide.

But the quote-unquote medical experts refused to go there, refused to acknowledge common sense, refused to compare with past viruses in any way that didn't hype the coronavirus counts.

This virus was different, Americans were told. This virus was far more contagious than anything ever before seen or studied, Americans were told. And any time the case counts dropped off and the numbers proved wrong, well, this was due to the social distancing and quarantining and face-mask wearing that Americans had been doing, by government's order — Americans were told.

It just didn't make sense.

It just doesn't add up.

It just didn't, and doesn't, justify the utter shredding of civil rights.

And now some in the medical community, thank goodness, are starting to point out the glaring omissions of logic and fact that have plagued this overhyped, overreaching coronavirus crackdown that has stretched on far, far too long.

Among some of Erickson's remarks: "This is immunology — microbiology 101. This is the basis of what we've known for years: When you take human beings and you say, 'Go into your house, clean all your counters, Lysol them down' ... what does it do to our immune system? ... Sheltering in place decreases your immune system."

And this: "Any time you have something new in the [medical] community, it sparks fear — and I would have done what Dr. Fauci did ... initially. ... But you know, looking at theories and models — which is what these folks use — is very different than the way the actual virus presents itself throughout communities."

And this: "Do you think you're protected from COVID when you wear gloves that transfer disease everywhere? ... We wear masks in an acute setting to protect us. [But] we're not wearing masks. Why is that? Because we understand microbiology. We understand immunology. And we want strong immune systems. I don't want to hide in my home, develop a weak immune system and then come out and get disease."

And this: "When I'm writing up my death report I'm being pressured to add COVID. Why is that? Why are we being pressured to add COVID? To maybe increase the numbers, and make it look a little bit worse than it is. We're being pressured in-house to add COVID to the diagnostic list when we think it has nothing to do with the actual cause of death. The actual cause of death was not COVID, but it's being reported as one of the diseases processes. ... COVID didn't kill them, 25 years of tobacco use killed."

Does it get any clearer than that?

Seriously, America. The only reason America is still in shutdown mode is political.

Either politicians are too afraid to make any move that might come back to bite them politically or politicians are using this coronavirus to political advantage — to, say, pass gun control laws, like Virginia's governor, Ralph Northam. Or to, say, float campaign hopes on the current ravaged economy, like former Vice President Joe Biden and oh, all the Democrats facing races.

But for the rest of America — the rest of hardworking, freedom-loving America — it's time to reel in the radically unconstitutional.

"If you're going to dance on someone's constitutional rights, you better have a good reason — you better have a really good reason, not just a theory," Erickson said. "The data is showing us it's time to lift ... so if we don't lift, what is the reason?"

That is the key question.

As time goes by, the answer will only become more and more evident. The coronavirus may be real — but the hype is hoaxed. Now let’s just hope this is a one-time hoax that doesn’t roll around every time flu season approaches.

For most people, the coronavirus causes mild or modest symptoms, such as fever and cough, that clear up in two to three weeks. For some, especially older adults and people with existing health problems, it can cause more severe life-threatening illnesses, including pneumonia. We have known this for some time now. We could have saved ourselves a lot of economic pain by pouring our resources into those who are vulnerable and let the virus run its course, like the flu, for the rest of us. People would have called in sick. Businesses would have seen sporadic employee shortages. Gradually, we would have started to establish "herd immunity," and life would have gone on, without major disruption. Now, after destroying the economy, we are still going to go through the second wave of infections because most of us still have no immunity, having been sequestered in our homes. There probably could not have been a worse way to handle this thing.

Sweden pursued a much more relaxed mitigation strategy, practicing social distancing while avoiding a national lockdown, and approximately 20% of Swedes may have been infected and may now be immune to the virus. They will achieve "herd immunity," and recover economically, much faster than the rest of the world.

Looks like you've also bought into the BS if you say it clears up COVID in two to three weeks, and in older people COVID "can cause more severe life threatening illnesses ..." Fact is, with a nomally exercised immune system COVID should hardly even be noticed over a couple of days of sniffles. Now we're finding that hospitals are being pressured into listing COVID as the cause of death, after years of a patient smoking and having concomitant severe illnesses. I was a clinical bio-researcher for years. If anyone should be afraid it should be me. At 89. I've had a massive heart attack, followed by a multiple bypass, leading to respiratory distress, liver

Just drink plenty of tonic water, grapefruit juice, and/or coffee, all of which are bitter because they contain quinine. Quinine, incidentally, is the natural form of hydroxychloroquine (HCQ), a synthetic patented by Bayer in 1934 to make big money. HCQ has long run out of patent and is cheap. It clears up COVID in a matter of hours 100%. The newly developed expensive shots being tested by Big Pharma has been only HELPING in 8 out of 11 cases, so far. ... Not very impressive.

And are the deaths and shutdowns in China, India and Europe also part of the hoax?

A "hoax" is an exaggeration. Calling it "an exaggeration" is more accurate.
